

TELL US ONCE

Usually when families are registering births or deaths, they have also had to contact a range of different agencies to notify them of these changes which can be complex, time-consuming and stressful, particularly at times of bereavement.

Stockton Council is making it quicker, easier and, in many cases, cheaper for residents to register changes in their personal circumstances with the introduction of the 'Tell Us Once' programme.

The 'Tell Us Once' scheme, (led from the Department of Work and Pensions or DWP) means that families will only need to contact the Council ONCE and, with their consent, their details will be automatically shared with other relevant agencies that need to know.

For many people, particularly those dealing with a bereavement, this can be a welcome relief from having to contact up to 24 separate agencies about issues ranging from Incapacity Benefit to State Pensions, Attendance Allowance and Council Tax.

As there is a statutory requirement to register births and deaths, Stockton Council has chosen to provide the service through the Registration Service with the TUO details being collected at the same time as registering. To the customer this will be a seamless process.

TUO has identified 24 core services (see fig.1) involved in the initial implementation of the programme, with the customer choosing which of these services are notified direct.

TUO is not asking people to provide information that they do not already have to give. It simply makes it easier for them to provide it. The service is not compulsory for the customer, they can choose not to take up the service at the point of registration or they can decide which departments receive notification of their change.

The service is restricted to the notification of births and deaths initially with a future phase planned to deal with address changes.

The key benefits of the TUO service are:

Initial Findings

Stockton adopted the TUO service with effect from 31 October 2011, within the first three weeks 63% of customers registering births have taken up the option of using TUO and 55% of death informants.

All feedback received from customers has been extremely positive. The overriding theme being the pressure and time it takes off the birth and death informant.

Birth informants have also been pleased that Stockton has chosen to offer the additional service of verifying child benefit claim forms and forwarding on their behalf to HM Revenue, Child Benefits Office.
